“Teachers of Tomorrow” Club to Visit
Colonial Williamsburg April 9th-10th

Last year, our student club, Teachers of Tomorrow made a whirlwind trip to Washington D.C. and it was a great success. This year we will be visiting Colonial Williamsburg in order to continue building the strong foundation that we, as future teachers, need to inspire our students. We will leave April 9th and return April 10th. Once again, the Auxiliary Enterprise Corporation of CCNY and Undergraduate Student Government are helping to support the trip in order to enrich our experiences as City College future teachers. The teacher development program of Colonial Williamsburg states that, “with growing numbers of new Americans unfamiliar with the founding principles of the republic and with decreasing emphasis on American history in our schools, it is vital that we do everything possible to help our diverse youth understand their history and its importance to their lives. Young people who understand American history are better equipped to become informed citizens. Colonial Williamsburg has developed an array of professional development programs and classroom resources to address this challenge; they introduce primary source documents, living history teaching techniques, and technology resources that invigorate the classroom and inspire young people with the ideals that launched the American republic. Colonial Williamsburg’s programs and educators assist teachers in helping their students develop critical thinking skills to analyze historical events, documents, and decisions, and to understand the founding principles of the United States and how they connect with today’s—and tomorrow’s—issues.”
